ABSTRACT

A report on the undergraduate origins of PhD holders for the periods of 1920-1980 and 1970-1980 is presented. Its three goals are to show how many of each of the 1,200 U.S. colleges had graduates who earned the PhD during the two time periods; to calculate the proportion of each college's graduates who had earned the PhD during the two time periods; and to rank colleges, within each time period, by the number of PhD holders and the proportion of PhD holders. The findings of the study are reported in a series of tables which rank the nation's 1,200 colleges by their overall performance and by their performance in specific disciplines. This report was produced from a more extensive and detailed database which contains the following information: college characteristics (enrollment, racial composition, federal region code); PhD data (total number of PhD recipients, total number of male PhD recipients, total number of female PhD recipients); and bachelor of arts degree (BA) data (total number of BA recipients, total number of male BA recipients, and total number of female BA recipients). The findings of the study are contained in the included tables: (1) estimated rate of PhD production per 1,000 BA degrees, all fields, 1920-80; (2) rate of PhD production per 1,000 BA degrees, all fields, 1970-80; (3) rate of PhD production per 1,000 BA degrees, by college major, 1970-80; (4) total number of PhD degrees, all by college major, 1970-80; (4) total number of PhD degrees, all fields, 1920-80; (5) total number of PhD degrees, by college major, 1920-80; (6) total number of PhD degrees, all fields, 1970-80; and (7) total number of PhD degrees, by college major, 1970-80. ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This project was funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities, N.E.H. Grant Number OP-20172-84.

This report would not have been possible without the advice and support of many individuals. First and foremost, thanks are due to the project staff; Bridget Collier of Randolph-Macon College, who coded all of the data; and John Dillon and Helen O'Boyle of Virginia Commonwealth University, who developed the computer programs necessary to manage the data for this project.

President Ladell Payne of Randolph-Macon College supported the project throughout. Rosanne Shalf of the Office of Development, Randolph-Macon College provided assistance and support. Linda Evans, Director of Public Relations, Randolph-Macon College, published some early conclusions of the study.

Professor Neil Henry of Virginia Commonwealth University gave superb technical advice about computer production and table design. During the stage of data coding, W. Vance Grant and his associates in the Office of Information of the National Center for Educational Statistics gave freely of their knowledge and assistance in locating relevant materials, and provided a hospitable place to work.

THE BACCALAUREATE ORIGINS OF PHD DEGREES: 1920-1980

This study reports on the undergraduate origins of PhD holders for the periods 1920-1980 and 1970-1980. The study had three goals:

1. to show how many of each college's graduates had earned the PhD during the two time periods;
2. to calculate the proportion of each college's graduates who had earned the PhD during the two time periods; and
3. to rank colleges, within each time period, by the number of PhD holders and the proportion of PhD holders.

The findings of the study are reported in a series of tables which rank the nation's 1200 colleges by their overall performance (the total number and the proportion of PhDs for each college) and by their performance in specific disciplines. The study adds to the growing body of information available to evaluate the long-term performance of colleges.

The Number and Proportion of PhDs as an Index of Performance. The animating idea of this study is that the proportion of PhD holders among a college's graduates is one significant indicator of the college's performance. Only a small proportion of the graduates of a college receive doctoral degrees. Yet, that proportion is important because of what it indicates about the ability of a college to recruit and retain talented students, encourage their scholarly interests, and develop their knowledge and skills. Over the long term, the fact that a relatively large proportion of a college's graduates receives the doctoral degree suggests that the college has established a mutually reinforcing pattern of standards, expectations, and achievement beyond the ordinary. The tables in this report help to identify which colleges have established such a pattern, both in terms of their overall performance and in terms of their performance in specific disciplines.

The idea of using PhD recipients as an index of performance is not new, though opinion differs about the best method for constructing such an index. Initially, researchers concentrated on calculating the total number of PhDs a college had produced, and constructed tables ranking colleges by their total output. For example, the Office of Institutional Research of Franklin and Marshall College (1977) published a ranking of 867 private liberal arts colleges based on the total number of PhD recipients, 1920-1975. This method of measuring performance can be called the "production" method because it views the total output or production of PhDs as the best indicator of educational performance.

Subsequent research (Hall, 1984; Hanson, 1985) has argued that the use of the total number of recipients is biased in favor of larger colleges. Because their enrollments are larger, they are likely to have larger numbers of PhD recipients, regardless of performance. In order to reduce the biasing effect of size and measure performance more directly, it is necessary to calculate the proportion of PhD recipients in the college's graduates. This proportion can be called the "productivity" of an insti-tution. Because they eliminate or reduce the biasing factor of size, rankings by productivity measures allow direct comparison of the performance of large and small colleges.

Scope and Methodology of This Study. The concept of productivity has been used in studies of selected groups of colleges (Hall, 1984; Hanson, 1985; Fuller, 1985), but this study is the most comprehensive to be published so far. It includes 1150 colleges, the largest number to be included in any study. The study includes overall college rankings by both production and productivity criteria for the periods 1920-1980 and 1970-1980. The study ranks colleges by their overall performance and by their performance in 21 discipline categories. Finally, it describes a data base established as a part of this project which can be used for more detailed studies of PhD productivity production and some of the institutional characteristics which may be correlated with them.

Selection of Colleges. In order to be included in the rankings by overall performance, a college had to meet two criteria. First, its primary mission had to be undergraduate liberal arts education. A CLASSIFICATION OF INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION (Carnegie Commission, 1977) served as the basis for deciding which colleges are liberal arts colleges in this sense. According to the Carnegie Commission (1977), higher educational institutions can be divided into four classes: Two-year institutions, Liberal Arts Colleges, Comprehensive Colleges and Universities, and Doctorate Granting Institutions. Liberal Arts Colleges and Comprehensive Colleges differ primarily in their mode of control, not their mission. Both feature a liberal arts curriculum, though the "Liberal Arts Colleges" are mainly private institutions while "Comprehensive Colleges" are mainly public ones. Therefore, if a college appeared on the list of either Liberal Arts Colleges or Comprehensive Colleges it was a candidate for inclusion in this study.

Second, there had to be sufficient data available to permit an estimate of the number of BA degrees granted and the number of PhD degrees granted. This meant that a college had to appear in the data files of the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) and the National Research Council (NRC), as described below, and, in the case of ranking overall performance for 1970-1980, the college had to have at least 100 BA graduates for that decade. The minimum of 100 BA graduates was established in order to minimize distortions arising from missing data.

These two criteria determine whether a college appears in the overall performance rankings. In order to be included in the rankings by discipline, a college had to meet an additional criterion: it had to offer a major in the discipline being ranked, and have graduated an average of at least one student a year in that major for the decade in which performance is measured. The criterion of one graduate a year was adopted to increase the validity of the rankings in assessing the strength of college programs. Since many of the colleges are small and the number of majors they offer limited, the rankings by discipline often contain many fewer colleges than the rankings by overall performance.

Data Sources. The study used two pieces of data about each college for each time period: (1) the average annual number of BA degrees granted (either the real total or an estimate), and (2) the average annual number of degrees granted during the time period. The first was obtained from the records of the National Center for Education Statistics. Throughout this century, NCES has collected reports from colleges and universities which include the number of BA degrees granted. For the years prior to 1965, these totals are found in published annual reports. For the years after 1965, they are also available on magnetic tape.

The number of PhDs granted was obtained from the Doctorate Records File of the National Research Council, an agency of the National Academy of Sciences. The organization of the Doctorate Records File is the source of two important limitations on the outcome of this study. First, the file is divided into the time periods of 1920-1980 and 1970-1980 rather than into a year-by-year time series. This limits the precision with which one can locate specific periods of productivity. Second, the file is divided into 21 discipline categories, a much smaller number than exists in the NCES files. Inevitably, some precision is lost in matching the two data files.

Computation of the Proportion of PhDs. In the following series of tables, colleges are ranked by both the number of PhDs (production) and the proportion of PhDs to BA graduates (productivity). The rankings by production are straightforward. Colleges are ranked in descending order by the total number of graduates who have received the PhD.

The measure used to rank colleges by overall PhD productivity, 1920-1980, is the estimated rate of PhD degrees per 1000 BA degrees granted. This measure was computed by dividing the average annual PhD production by the estimated average annual BA production. The yearly PhD production was computed by dividing the total number of PhDs by 61, the number of years in the period. The BA production was estimated by (1) sampling the number of BA degrees every fourth year between 1916 and 1949, and adding this to the number of BA degrees for every year between 1949 and 1976; (2) dividing that total by the number of years sampled. The sampling procedure was employed to reduce the effort needed for hand data processing because BA degree totals prior to 1965 are not available on computer tape.

Complete data was available to compute the college's overall productivity rate, 1970-1980, as well as its rate of productivity for specific disciplines, 1970-1980. Computation of the rate of PhDs per 1000 BAs for each discipline required adjustment of the lag time between granting of the BA and granting of the PhD, because the average rate of completion across disciplines varies widely. According to the DIGEST OF EDUCATION STATISTICS (U.S. Department of Education, 1982: 133) the median years elapsed between granting of the BA and the PhD is 13.1 years in education, 7.6 years in engineering, 10.6 years in humanities, 7.3 years in life sciences, 7.0 years in mathematics, 6.8 years in physics, 11.1 years in professional fields, and 8.7 years in the social sciences.

The Data Base. This report was produced from a more extensive and detailed data base which contains the following information.

I. College Characteristics
- Enrollment, 1980
- Average Salary for Associate Professors, 1980
- Date of Founding
- AAUP Institution Code
- State in Which Located
- Federal Region Code
- Carnegie Foundation Institution Code
- Racial Composition
- Gender Composition

II. PhD Data
- Total Number of PhD Recipients, 1920-1980; 1970-1980
- Total Number of Male PhD Recipients, 1920-1980; 1970-1980
- Total Number of Female PhD Recipients, 1920-1980; 1970-1980
- Total Number of PhD Recipients, by Discipline, 1970-1980
- Total Number of Male PhD Recipients, by Discipline, 1970-1980
- Total Number of Female PhD Recipients, by Discipline, 1970-1980

Note: The Discipline Classification is as follows:

- Physics and Astronomy
- Chemistry
- Mathematics and Computer Science
- Chemical Engineering
- Earth Sciences
- Biochemistry
- Basic Medical Sciences
- Other Biological Sciences
- Medical Sciences
- Agricultural Sciences
- Psychology
- Economics and Econometrics
- Anthropology and Sociology
- Political Science and Public Administration
- Other Social Sciences
- History
- English and American Language and Literature
- Foreign Languages and Literature
- Other Humanities Fields
- Professional Fields
- Education

III. BA Data

- Total Number of BA Recipients, 1916-1980; 1970-1980
- Total Number of Male BA Recipients, 1916-1980; 1970-1980
- Total Number of Female BA Recipients, 1916-1980; 1970-1980
- Total Number of BA Recipients, by Discipline, 1962-1980
- Total Number of Male BA Recipients, by Discipline, 1962-1980
- Total Number of Female BA Recipients, by Discipline, 1962-1980

Note: The Discipline classification for BA recipients is the same as that for PhD recipients. The years included are based on the average amount of time taken to complete a PhD after receiving a BA degree.

Not all of the information is available for all of the colleges included in the data base. Not all colleges report their total estimated alumni, for example. However, the data base can serve as an important source of research on the productivity of liberal arts colleges. Complete details of the data base can be found in Hanson (1986), available from Randolph-Macon College. Researchers who are interested in using the data base may inquire about its use and cost from Randolph-Macon College.

Interpretation of Findings. The findings of this study are contained in the tables which follow. The following general guidelines should be kept in mind when reading and interpreting the tables. First, ranking tables are best understood as a portrayal of the relative positions of the colleges ranked. The absolute number or proportion of PhD holders is not nearly as important as the position of the college within the overall structure. Second, tied ranks exist but can be interpreted in positional terms. The tables as printed reflect differences of three decimal places. Differences between colleges may not show up until the fourth or fifth decimal place. In such cases, they will appear as tied ranks. However, the colleges whose ranks are tied are printed in the order they appear to the sixth decimal place. Third, the disciplinary productivity tables must be interpreted with extreme caution. The National Center for Education Statistics estimates that 46.2% of PhD holders earned their PhD and BA degrees in different disciplines (U.S. Department of Education, 1982: 133). Again, there is considerable variation across disciplines. While nearly 82% of PhDs in math also had BAs in math, only 39% of those in education had BA degrees in education. This is reason to be cautious about interpreting the disciplinary tables too closely. While large differences may reflect real performance, small differences in rankings may be the result of statistical uncertainty or errors inherent in the data.
